

Hello friends:

I've recently developed a website for an architect in San Francisco. I thought you might like to see a few features that I've incorporated into his site.

The architect-client has designed the site (as you might have expected), choosing the background and font colors and the photo layout. I edited the photos extensively, giving many of them corner-to-corner contact. I laid out the page links and copyedited and proofread his commentaries.

www.johnmcleanarchitect.net

- Do you like the look of the site? The Home page? The five main pages?
- Is the site easy to navigate?
- How attractive are the 20 Work pages?
- Did you gain anything from the 35 Building Advice pages?
- Did you open any of his Publication pages?
- Do you like the architect's colorful logo?

Your opinions are important to me. I'd like to hear back from you if you wouldn't mind emailing your comments, concerns, and suggestions with me.

Thanks, in advance.
